Fellow street artist Shepard Fairey wrote in Swindle:. Invader's pop art may seem shallow, but by taking the risk of illegally re-contextualizing video game characters in an urban environment that provides more chaotic social interaction than a gamer's bedroom, he makes a statement about the desensitizing nature of video games and consumer culture.

RINO. One of Denver's creative hubs, River North Art District (RiNo) leans heavily on its industrial past, preferring to revitalize historic warehouses and factories rather than tearing things down. In that same spirit, it's fitting that the district's creative expression extends well beyond its galleries' walls, with colorful and innovative street art around nearly every corner and an ...
